FIVE POINTS

Five Points is one of Denver’s most historic and culturally rich neighborhoods, celebrated for its deep roots in jazz, arts, and community activism. Often referred to as the “Harlem of the West,” the neighborhood once hosted legendary musicians such as Duke Ellington, Billie Holiday, and Louis Armstrong, and that musical legacy remains alive today through live music venues, public art installations, and cultural events like the annual Juneteenth Music Festival. Architecturally, Five Points features a diverse mix of restored Victorian homes, historic row houses, and early 20th-century commercial buildings, alongside thoughtfully designed modern infill and mixed-use developments. The neighborhood has experienced significant revitalization in recent years, bringing an energetic mix of acclaimed restaurants, local breweries, coffee shops, galleries, and creative office spaces. With easy access to downtown Denver, RiNo, Coors Field, major employment centers, and multiple transit options including light rail, Five Points offers a highly walkable, urban lifestyle that blends historic character with modern convenience and a strong sense of community.
