Adelanto is a High Desert community in San Bernardino County located along U.S. Highway 395, approximately nine miles northwest of Victorville. The city sits within the Victor Valley submarket of the Inland Empire, an emerging growth corridor driven by relatively low land costs, expanding infrastructure, and proximity to major logistics and employment centers.

The presence of the former George Air Force Base—now redeveloped as Southern California Logistics Airport (SCLA)—has been a key economic catalyst. This asset has supported large-scale warehouse, distribution, and aerospace uses, positioning Adelanto as a secondary Inland Empire industrial node and driving steady job creation in the Victor Valley.

From a commercial real estate perspective, the Highway 395 corridor has become the primary axis of growth, with increasing concentrations of retail, service, and mixed-use development near Mojave Drive and Air Expressway. Public infrastructure investments, including planned roadway improvements and corridor widening, are expected to further enhance accessibility and long-term viability for commercial uses.

Residential growth is a major supporting factor. Within an approximate three-mile radius of the subject area, there are roughly 3,588 approved homes across 39 tracts, representing a substantial pipeline of future population and consumer demand. This expanding housing base is expected to drive continued demand for neighborhood retail, quick-service restaurants, and service-oriented commercial development, reinforcing Adelanto's position as an emerging opportunity market within the Inland Empire North.
