HISTORY

The Village Inn and Tavern

History of The Village Inn and Tavern

The Village Inn and Tavern in Belgrade Lakes, Maine, has a long and storied history rooted in the region's lakefront tradition. It first opened its doors in 1921 as The Locust House, a rustic hunt-country lakefront hotel owned by Ed Megill, a local guide who had moved to Belgrade shortly after 1900. The Locust House catered to sportsmen and hardy tourists seeking fishing guides, fine food, and lodging amid the pristine lakes and woodlands of the Belgrade Lakes region.

During the 1920s, the Belgrade Lakes became a popular summer escape for the wealthy and famous, drawing figures such as cosmetics magnate Elizabeth Arden and the L.L. Bean brothers, who owned camps nearby. The area's charm and natural beauty also inspired writers like E.B. White, whose fishing memories influenced his essay Once More to the Lake, and Ernest Thompson, whose Academy Award-winning screenplay On Golden Pond immortalized Great Pond in Belgrade.

In the 1960s, Paul Provandie, a longtime summer visitor, bought the Locust House and spent two years renovating it. In 1969, the building reopened as The Village Inn, introducing its now-famous 12-Hour Roast Duck recipe and pies made by Provandie's wife, Priscilla. This dish, introduced in 1962, has since become a national tradition, with The Village Inn selling more whole roast duck entrees than any other restaurant in the U.S.

The inn has remained a central part of Belgrade Lakes life, serving as a dining and lodging destination for generations. Its waterfront setting, historic architecture, and preservation of its signature dishes have made it a beloved landmark in the region. Today, it continues to celebrate its 100th anniversary as an inn, maintaining its legacy while adapting to modern hospitality needs.
