Local Area Overview | Demographics

Chowchilla, California, is a small but strategically located city in Madera County, situated along California State Route 99 in the heart of the Central Valley. With a population of roughly 19,000, the city offers a balance of affordability, accessibility, and community-oriented living. Chowchilla benefits from strong regional connectivity, with easy access to larger markets such as Fresno and Merced, making it an appealing location for commercial investment and retail development. The main commercial corridor along Robertson Boulevard (State Route 233) provides high visibility and traffic exposure, making it ideal for businesses seeking to capture local and regional customers.

The city's economic base includes agriculture, distribution, and retail services, with opportunities for redevelopment and new commercial projects. Recent city planning efforts emphasize growth, mixed-use development, and revitalization of underutilized areas, supporting a business-friendly environment. With lower costs compared to major California markets, available land for development, and supportive city infrastructure,
