OCMULGEE MOUNDS NATIONAL HISTORICAL PARK

OCMULGEE MOUNDS

Centuries ago, the area currently recognized as Ocmulgee Mounds in central Georgia flourished as a significant Indigenous hub. Discoveries of artifacts on the site trace back to as early as 8000 to 1000 B.C. During the 18th century, it served as the focal point for around 60 villages forming the Muscogee (Creek) Nation.

At present, the Muscogee Nation, one of the United States' largest tribes, alongside local collaborators, are spearheading an endeavor to designate Ocmulgee Mounds as Georgia's inaugural national park. If successful, Ocmulgee would mark the first national park jointly managed by a displaced tribe, one of the five forcibly removed from their lands during the tragic events of the Trail of Tears in the summer of 1836, as recorded in history.

Although Congress is yet to set a voting schedule, the proposal has garnered support from both political parties. For the Muscogee Nation, securing national park status signifies a safeguard for Ocmulgee's future.

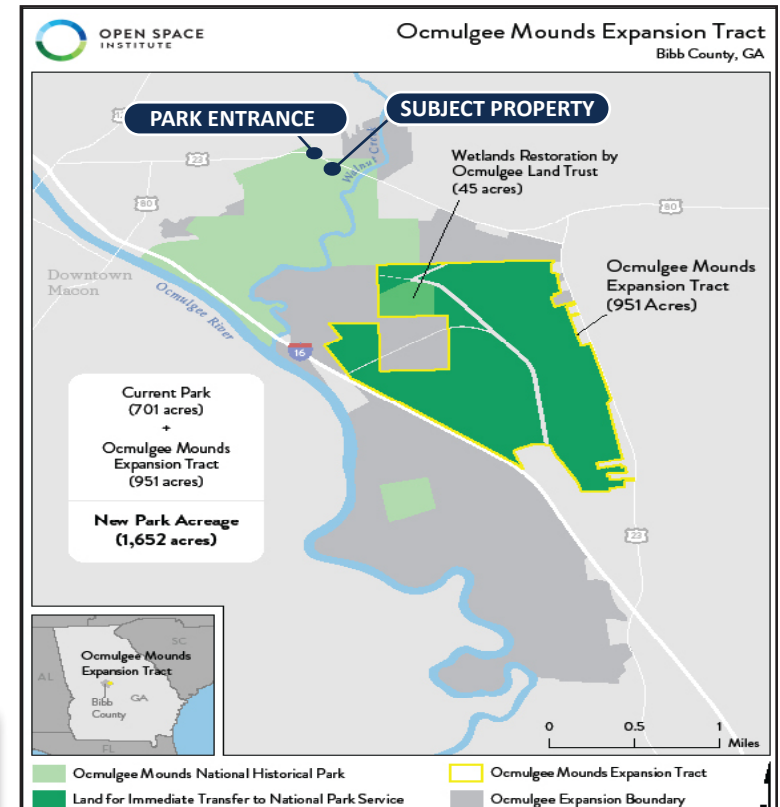

POTENTIAL ECONOMIC IMPACT

Based on a recent study conducted by economists from the University of Tennessee's Department of Agricultural and Resource Economics, the creation of an Ocmulgee National Park and Preserve is projected to generate a significant increase in economic activity for the communities in Central Georgia.

Key discoveries from the report suggest that within 15 years of establishment:

- An Ocmulgee National Park and Preserve could witness an approximate six-fold surge in yearly visits compared to the existing public lands operating independently.
- The upgraded designation is predicted to contribute around $206.7 million in added annual economic activity in Middle Georgia, along with an extra $76.5 million in annual labor income and $29.8 million in increased tax revenue.
- An Ocmulgee National Park and Preserve would facilitate an additional 2,814 jobs, which is over eighteen times the current number of jobs sustained by the Ocmulgee National Monument.

The recently safeguarded 951-acre parcel is situated near the park and falls within Macon's city limits. Prior to Open Space Institutes (OSI) land acquisition deal in 2021, the property faced the threat of unsuitable industrial development. This initiative follows the significant park expansion in 2019, increasing the authorized boundary from 701 acres to over 3,000 acres. This expansion lays the groundwork for the development of an exceptional urban park that narrates the tale of uninterrupted human habitation in the Ocmulgee basin spanning 17,000 years.

IN THE AREA

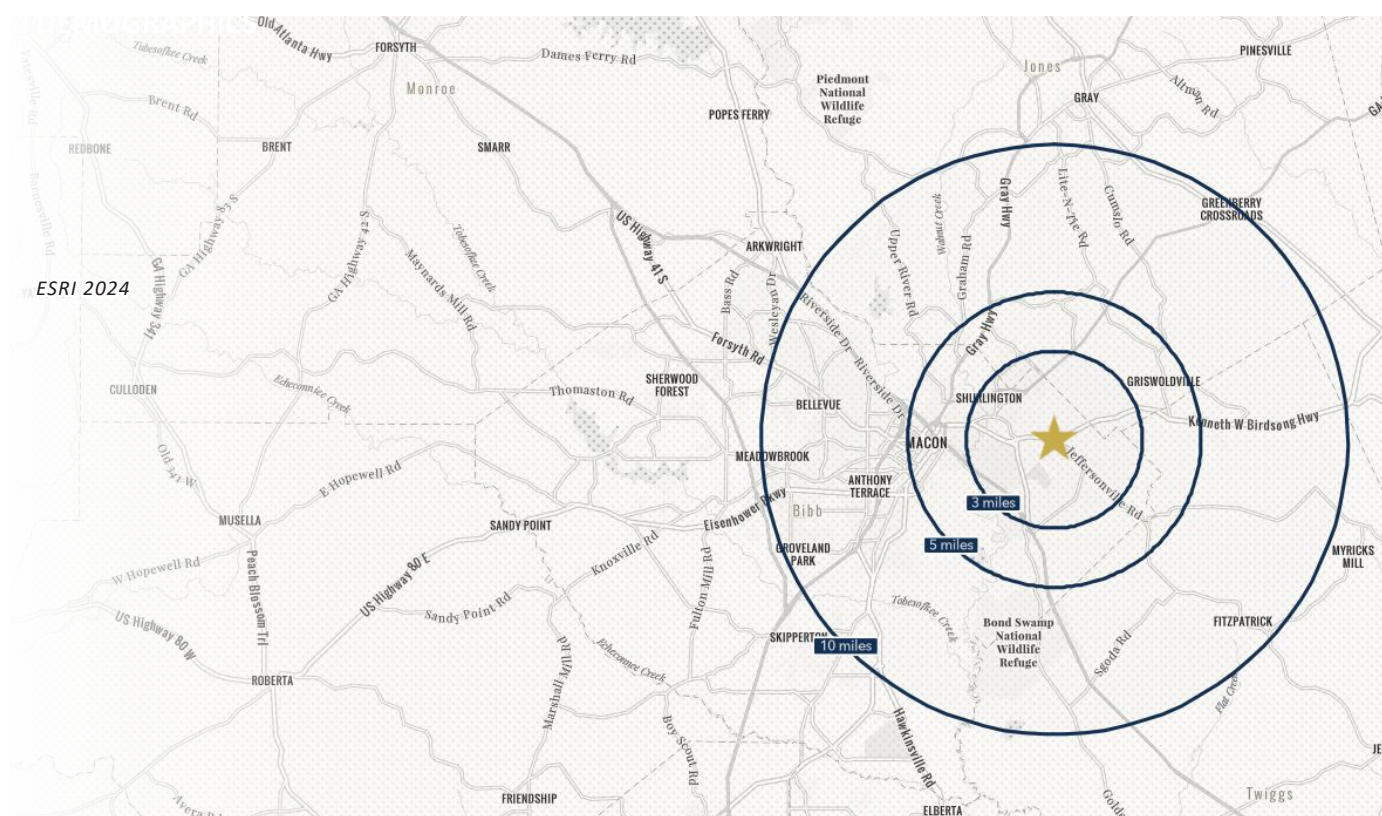

OCMULGEE MOUNDS NATIONAL PARK

The Ocmulgee National Monument, located in central Georgia, stands as a significant historic location showcasing Native American mounds dating back several centuries. Additionally, the area boasts a wealth of natural resources. Along the Ocmulgee River corridor, visitors can indulge in various outdoor activities, including hunting, fishing, hiking, bird watching, and paddling.

DOWNTON MACON

In the 2010 census, Downtown Macon experienced its initial population rise in decades, expanding at a rate six times faster than the entire county. It stands out as one of Macon's most diverse regions. With a thriving community of over 400 active businesses spanning various sectors, Downtown accommodates a daily workforce of more than 25,000 individuals, constituting nearly half of the city's labor force and over a quarter of the Metropolitan Statistical Area's employees. This concentrated workforce offers convenient access to potential customers for businesses initiating or transitioning operations in the downtown area.
