Wilmington, MA Summary

Wilmington is a town in Middlesex County, Massachusetts, located approximately 17 miles north of Boston. As of the 2020 census, the town had a population of 23,349. Wilmington is part of the Boston–Cambridge–Newton Metropolitan Statistical Area and benefits from access to major employment centers throughout Greater Boston.

Founded in the 18th century, Wilmington transitioned from an agricultural community to a suburban residential town during the 20th century, supported by transportation links and regional job growth. Today, the town is served by Interstate 93, Route 38 and commuter rail service via the MBTA's Lowell Line, providing connectivity to Boston and other regional hubs.

Wilmington's economy is closely tied to the broader Boston region and includes a mix of healthcare, professional services, retail and light industrial activity. Office and industrial parks along major roadways support local employment, while many residents commute to nearby cities such as Boston, Woburn and Burlington. The town's commercial base includes neighborhood retail centers, service businesses and small-scale corporate offices.

Residential development is primarily single-family housing, with newer multifamily and mixed-use projects emerging in recent years. Housing demand is supported by the town's schools, public services and access to employment corridors. Median household incomes are above state averages, reflecting Wilmington's position within the Greater Boston suburban market.

Wilmington balances suburban growth with community amenities such as parks, conservation areas and local recreation facilities. Its location, transportation access and residential character make it a stable component of the northern Boston suburban market, with ongoing appeal for both families and commuters.
