Cross River Center

A Farley White Interests property

Cross River Center is a place where new ideas flourish. Originally constructed by Wang Laboratories in 1981, the 3-story property has been transformed into a multi-tenant project for first class office and R&D space. At 836,000 square feet, Cross River Center offers abundant space for a wide range of operations from a call center to pharmaceutical/research to medical device manufacturing and more.

With expansive space and key amenities, Cross River Center represents a clear advantage over stand-alone buildings. Its 7,000 square foot full-service cafeteria, conference facilities, fitness center and ample loading capacity provides significant added value for tenants. Exceptional electrical and HVAC capacity ensures the building's long-term suitability for technology-oriented tenants.

Cross River Center is conveniently located off Route 113, minutes from downtown Lowell and the University of Massachusetts Lowell campus, and easily accessible from routes 3 and 495. The surrounding greater Merrimack Valley is home to a sizeable professional and well-educated workforce.

Dynamic Transformation

Lowell's history is one of growth and evolution, evidenced by its transformation from a hard-working 19th century mill town to a vibrant and vital 21st century center of business and technology.
