HISTORIC OVERVIEW

Collier Hall is a three-story brick building constructed around 1900, originally known as Georgia Seagle Hall and developed as one of Gainesville's early purpose-built communal residential buildings serving the University of Florida community. Designed with shared living in mind, the property featured numerous bedrooms, common bathrooms, and gathering spaces that supported student and group housing during a formative period in the city's growth. As Gainesville and the university expanded, the building continued its role as group housing and was later known as Paradigm Hall, reflecting a continued emphasis on collaborative, community-oriented residential use. In more recent decades, the property became known as Collier Hall, maintaining its historic function as large-scale student and organizational housing. Its architectural features—including a prominent front porch, interior courtyard, and durable brick construction - a characteristic of early 20th-century institutional residential design. Located along West University Avenue, one of Gainesville's most historic corridors connecting downtown to campus, the building has remained closely tied to academic life for over a century and stands today as a rare surviving example of turn-of-the-century student housing, valued for both its longevity and its enduring role in Gainesville's educational and social history.
