Prineville's Rich History and Economic Landscape

Founded in the late 1800s as a key hub for Central Oregon ranchers and loggers, Prineville is the oldest city in Central Oregon and remains the seat of Crook County. Its economy was historically rooted in timber and agriculture, with wood products manufacturing long serving as the area's economic backbone. Today, Prineville continues to evolve while honoring its roots, building a more diverse and resilient economy.

Employment and Industry

Like much of rural Oregon, Crook County's economy is driven by small businesses—over 75% of private firms have fewer than ten employees. While major employers such as Les Schwab and Contact Industries provide local stability, the region is seeing growth in several key sectors, including advanced wood manufacturing, data centers, warehousing and transportation, healthcare, and government land management.

Economic Growth and Infrastructure

Tech giants Apple and Facebook have chosen Prineville for large-scale data center operations, bringing high-tech infrastructure, jobs, and investment to the region. Facebook operates one of the world's most energy-efficient data centers here. With significant infrastructure in place to support growth—including water and wastewater systems—Prineville is positioned for sustainable development. The city also offers some of the most affordable industrial land in Central Oregon, helping attract new businesses and foster long-term economic vitality.

Housing Market Trends

As with much of the rest of the country, residential property prices peaked to all-time highs in 2007 and declined in by as much as 40% in the following years. Prices have rebounded substantially; both median and average home prices increased in 2016 across the region and are currently at or above all-time highs. The median home price in Crook County is $597,900 and $489,900 within the City of Prineville (2025).
