THE RAND BUILDING

HISTORY

1913

Architects Sanguinet and Staats designed the eight-story steel frame, concrete, red brick, and terra cotta structure in the Commercial or Chicago School style for the Wolff & Marx Co. department store.

1913 - 1965

Wolff & Marx operated its flagship store here, becoming a downtown retail icon.

1965

Wolff & Marx closed its doors. The building was subsequently retrofitted into an office tower to adapt to changing urban demands.

1969

The building's iconic four-sided clock, a prominent feature of its facade, was removed and sold.

1981

The San Antonio Conservation Society intervened to prevent demolition, purchasing the building and selling it to Randstone Ventures for restoration.

2013

Weston Urban acquired the property and commenced a complete interior and exterior renovation, blending the building's historic elements with modern amenities.

2021

The original clock was located, restored, and reinstalled at its original location on the building facade.

2025

Today, the Rand Building is a testament to San Antonio's architectural and commercial evolution, seamlessly integrating its storied past with a vibrant future.
