HISTORY

THE STORY OF A MASTERPIECE

The current Board of Trade Building opened its doors on June 9, 1930.

One of Chicago's most iconic landmarks, The Chicago Board of Trade Building has been a fixture of the city's skyline since 1930. Adorned by its statue of Ceres, the Roman goddess of agriculture, the building has become an enduring symbol of the city of Chicago.

Today, completely revamped with industry-leading technology and telecoms infrastructure, The Chicago Board of Trade Building is perfectly positioned for another century at the forefront of business innovation.

The 1997 expansion, designed by famed architect Helmut Jahn, added 60,000 square feet of trading space to the building.

The building underwent an extensive renovation in 2005, including restoration of the historic art deco lobby.
