REGIONAL MAP

INLAND EMPIRE

The Inland Empire, consisting of Riverside and San Bernardino Counties in Southern California, has emerged as a critical nexus for the Transportation, Distribution, and Logistics (TDL) or goods movement sector. At the confluence of port-bound freeways and rail spurs along the eastern edge of Los Angeles' sprawl, the Inland Empire is ideally situated for the TDL and warehousing markets.

About 40% of all containers entering the U.S. from Asia are handled by the ports of L.A. and Long Beach. More than 37,000 heavy and tractor-trailer truck drivers based in the Inland Empire haul that cargo to rails and warehouses scattered across Riverside and San Bernardino Counties' 27,000 square miles, which is double the land area of the next largest metropolitan area, Phoenix-Scottsdale in Arizona.
