CITY OF SANTA FE SPRINGS INDUSTRIAL BASE & ECONOMIC OVERVIEW

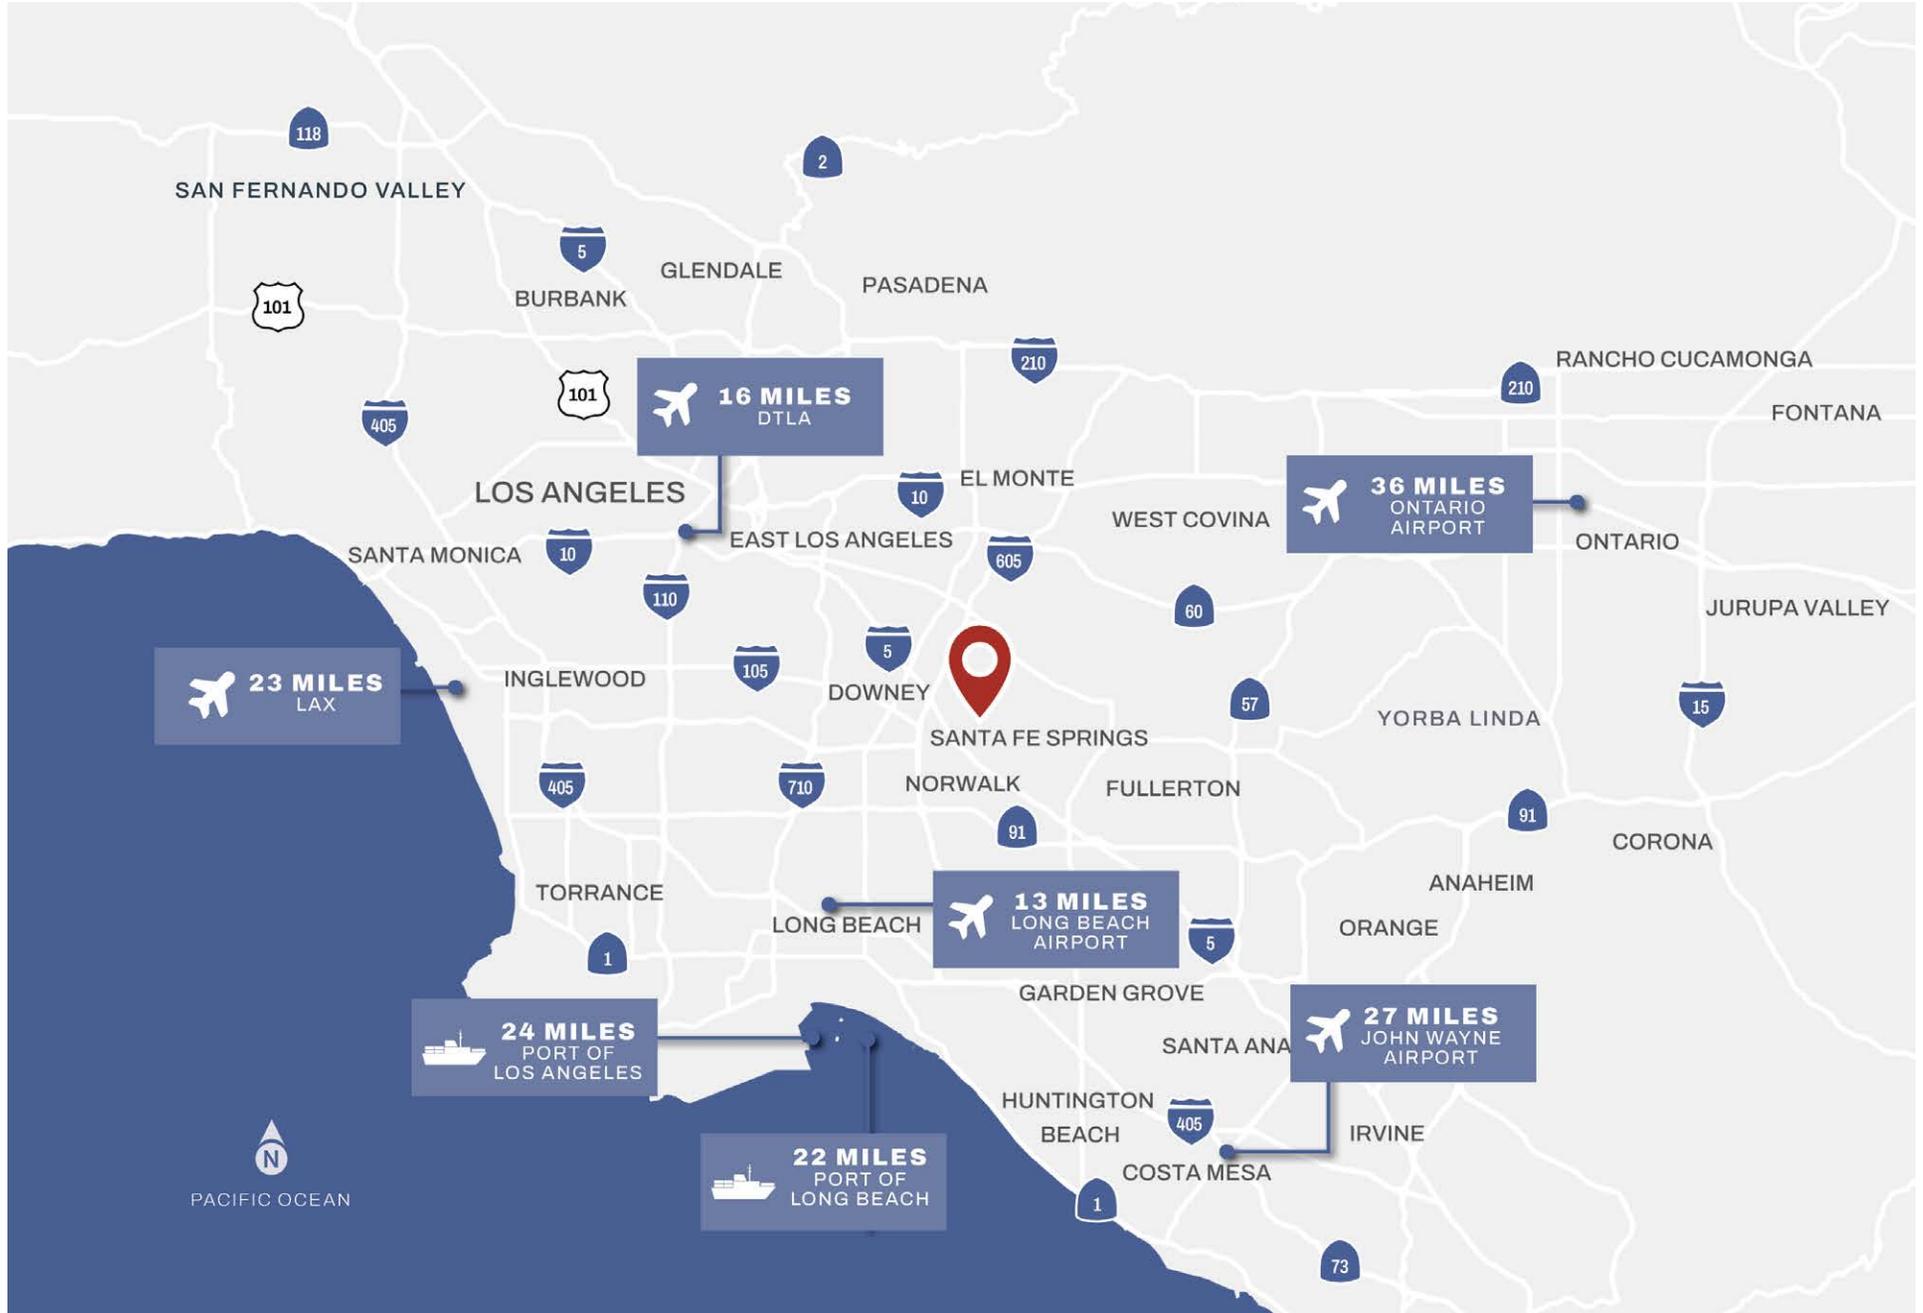

Santa Fe Springs is one of the most industrially concentrated cities in Los Angeles County, with over 54 million square feet of industrial and commercial space, despite comprising less than 1% of the County's total land area. The City has built its identity around manufacturing, logistics, and distribution, and maintains a long standing policy framework that actively preserves and protects industrial zoning.

The local economy is driven by a diverse industrial base including manufacturing, food production, packaging, logistics, automotive, aerospace support, and metal fabrication, with hundreds of operating businesses ranging from family owned firms to global operators. This depth of tenancy has produced a resilient employment base and sustained demand for functional industrial facilities across economic cycles.

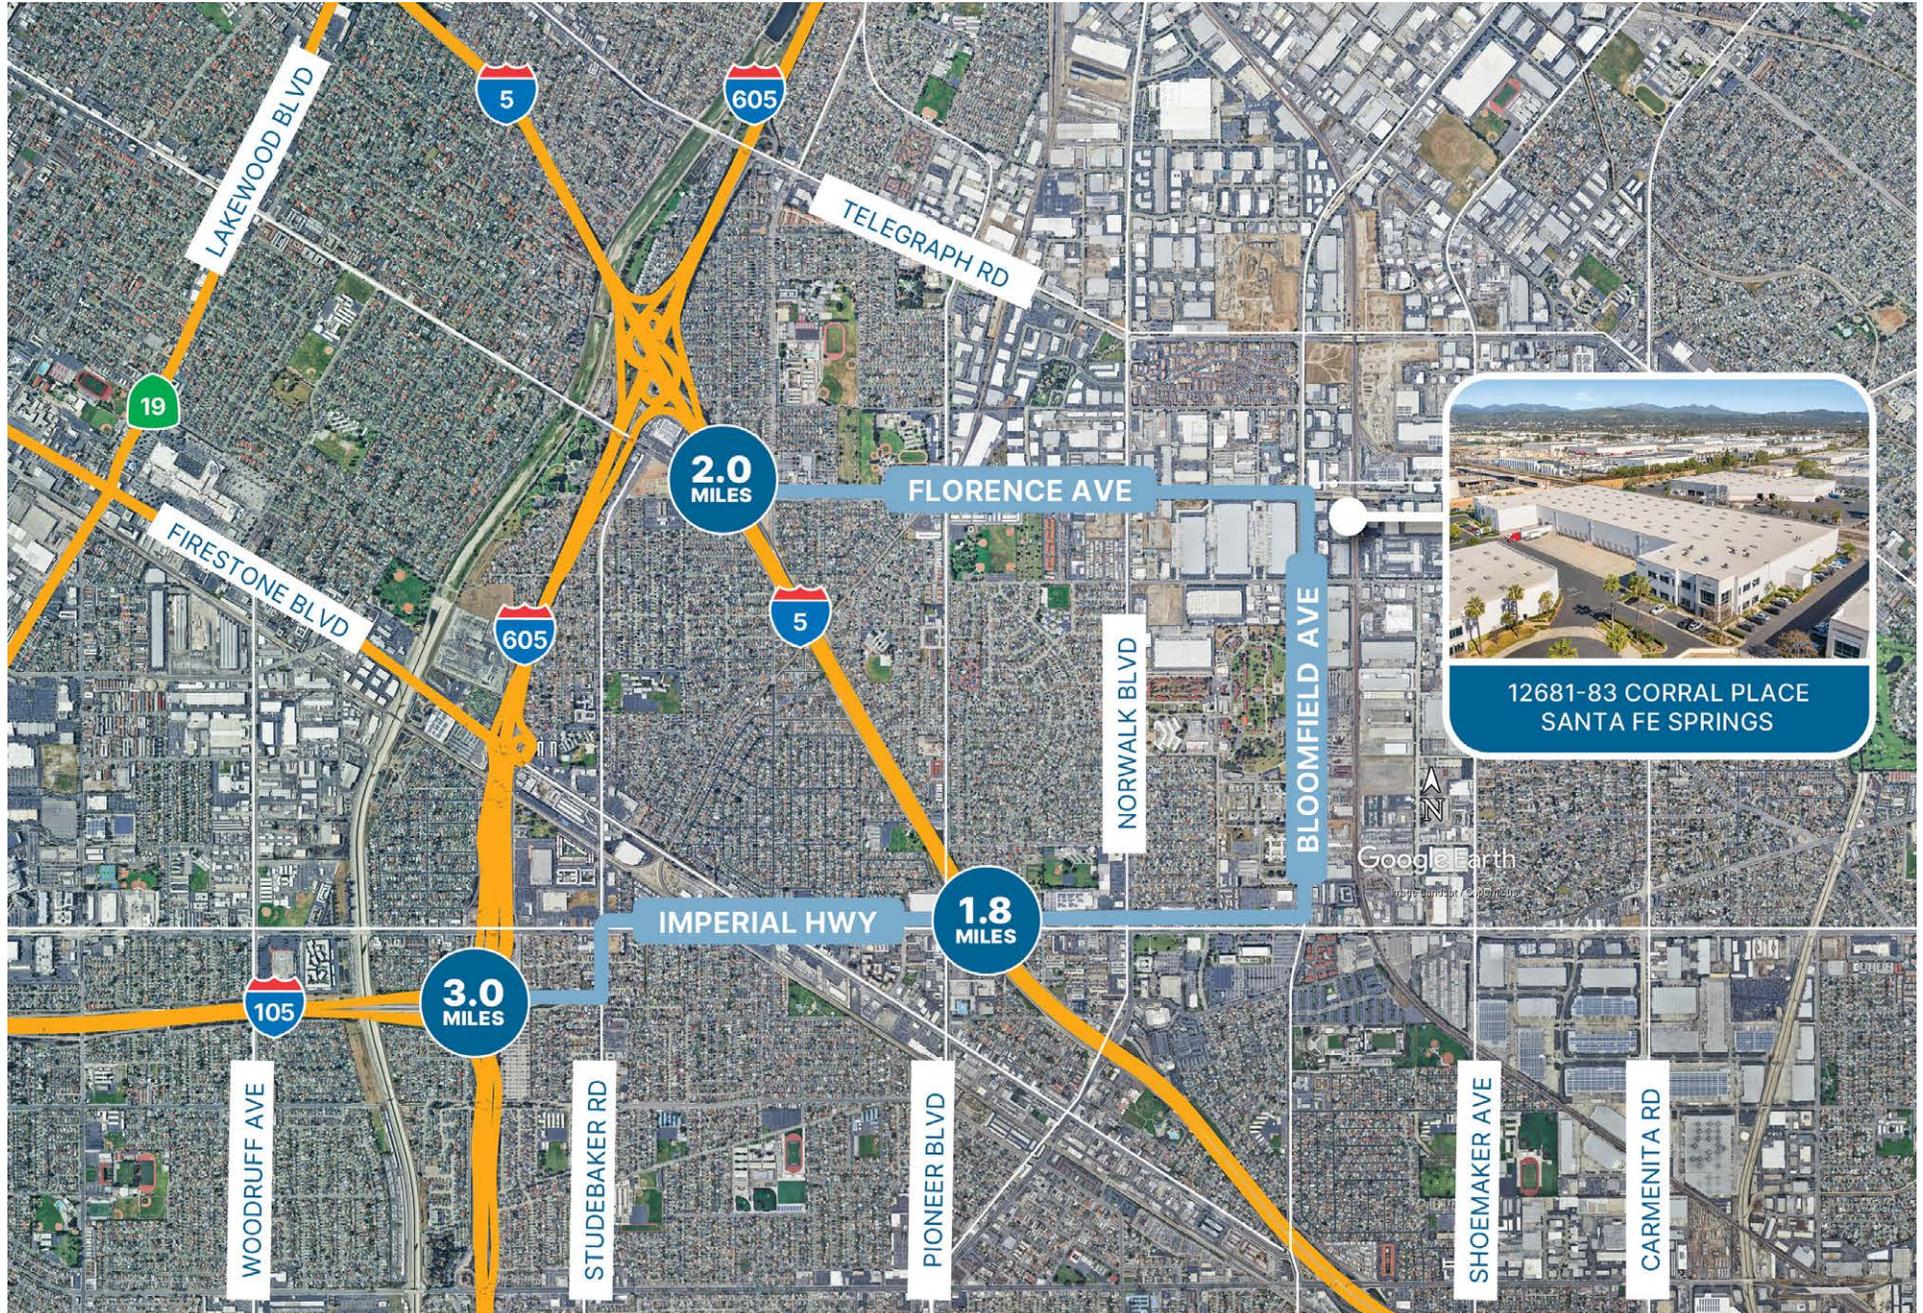

Santa Fe Springs is a core member of the "BIG 4" industrial cities (Santa Fe Springs, Commerce, Industry, and Vernon), which collectively account for over 24% of all industrial square footage in Los Angeles County, making the region one of the most critical industrial hubs in Southern California. This concentration supports long term occupancy stability and reinforces the City's role as a regional economic engine.

The City continues to demonstrate a pro business, pro industry posture, recently launching a comprehensive Business Growth & Attraction Program that includes financial incentives, expedited permitting, and infrastructure support aimed at retaining and expanding industrial users. These policies further strengthen Santa Fe Springs' position as a preferred location for owner users seeking long term operational stability in an infill Southern California market with exceptionally high barriers to entry.
