LOCATION MAP

Located in Eastern Henrico County, 700 N Airport Dr is strategically located near the Richmond International Airport, multiple shopping centers, and conveniently next to I-295 and I-64.

Henrico County, Virginia boasts a diverse economic landscape driven by several key corporations and employment drivers. One of the prominent sectors is the healthcare industry. Henrico is home to the renowned Henrico Doctors' Hospital and the Virginia Commonwealth University (VCU) Health System, both of which are major employers in the region. These healthcare institutions not only provide top-notch medical services but also create a significant number of jobs, ranging from healthcare professionals to administrative staff.

The county also benefits from a thriving technology and data center industry. Tech giants like Facebook, Amazon Web Services, and QTS Data Centers have established a strong presence in Henrico County, attracted by its reliable power infrastructure and connectivity options. These companies not only contribute to the local economy through job creation but also bolster the region's reputation as a hub for tech innovation.

Moreover, Henrico County's central location in the Richmond metropolitan area positions it as a logistical hub. Several distribution centers and logistics companies, such as FedEx and UPS, have operations in the county, taking advantage of its proximity to major highways and ports. These logistics companies provide employment opportunities across a spectrum of roles, from warehouse workers to logistics coordinators.

In addition to these sectors, Henrico County is also fostering small businesses and entrepreneurship through initiatives like the Henrico Entrepreneurial Ecosystem. This initiative supports local startups and encourages innovation, contributing to the diversity and resilience of the county's economy.

Overall, Henrico County's economic success is driven by a combination of healthcare, technology, logistics, and a supportive environment for small businesses, making it an attractive destination for both established corporations and emerging enterprises.
