The City of Belton is committed to the promotion of quality development as well as to the expansion of its existing business base. City leaders encourage entrepreneurs, new businesses and support expansion of existing businesses by offering incentive programs that further the retail sector and downtown redevelopment.

The Belton Economic Development Corporation will assist companies looking to expand or relocate to Belton by accessing different local and state programs. BEDC incentives are based on job creation and capital investment and are primarily intended for manufacturing and industrial development, warehouse and distribution, research and development facilities, headquarter facilities and information technology.

BEDC has successfully worked with the city, county and state officials to offer competitive incentive packages tailored to meet the needs of existing expanding companies, as well as new companies moving to Belton.

Chapter 380 of the Texas Local Government Code allows Belton to offer a range of incentives for economic development, including the ability to rebate some of the city's portion of the 1.0% sales and use tax collected from business entities located in the jurisdiction.

BEDC staff can facilitate the process for your company's new construction with the City of Belton. Additionally, a flexible and expedited permitting process and fee waivers may be granted in coordination with BEDC incentives.
