SURVEY

THE ORANGEBURG MARKET

Orangeburg, strategically positioned between Columbia and Charleston along the I-26 corridor, has emerged as a dynamic hub for industrial and manufacturing operations in South Carolina's Midlands region. The city's prime location provides direct access to major transportation routes, including interstates, U.S. highways, and proximity to the Port of Charleston, giving manufacturers and distributors a competitive edge for regional and global markets.

Over the past decade, Orangeburg County has proactively cultivated a robust industrial base anchored by advanced manufacturing, automotive supply, metal fabrication, and food processing sectors. The area is home to established global companies such as Husqvarna, Allied Air Enterprises, and Zeus Industrial Products, which have expanded operations thanks to the region's skilled workforce and business-friendly environment. The county's industrial parks — including the John W. Matthews Industrial Park and the Orangeburg County/City Industrial Park — offer shovel-ready sites, modern infrastructure, and room for future growth.

A notable area of ongoing industrial development is Rowesville Road, which runs south of downtown Orangeburg and has become an important corridor for manufacturing and distribution. This area benefits from easy access to U.S. Highway 21 and I-26, making it highly attractive for new industrial projects. The Rowesville Road area is drawing interest from site selectors seeking cost-effective locations with available utilities and transportation connectivity.

Local and state economic development incentives continue to position Orangeburg as a competitive choice for companies looking to expand or relocate in the Southeast.

Looking ahead, sustained investment in infrastructure improvements along corridors like Rowesville Road, coupled with the region's commitment to economic diversification, ensures that Orangeburg remains a compelling destination for manufacturing and distribution operations seeking a strategic, cost-effective, and growth-oriented location.
