AREA OVERVIEW

South Chicago Heights is a small village in southern Cook County, Illinois, covering about 1.6 square miles within the Chicago metropolitan area. Home to roughly 4,000 residents and Incorporated in 1907, the village maintains a working-class character and benefits from proximity to major transportation routes and nearby industrial employment centers.

Strategic Commercial Location

The property benefits from outstanding street visibility and excellent signage opportunities, ensuring your business will be seen by a steady flow of local and commuter traffic. Its flexible zoning supports a variety of uses, from retail and office space to service-based operations or redevelopment projects. With strong demographics in the surrounding area and close proximity to major routes including I-394, I-57, and U.S. Route 30, the location provides quick connections to Chicago’s South Suburbs and Northwest Indiana.

Redevelopment Momentum & Infrastructure Investment

South Chicago Heights is undergoing a transformative resurgence, anchored by strategic public-private partnerships and infrastructure reinvestment that are unlocking new commercial and industrial momentum. The village leverages three active TIF districts and its inclusion within the Lincoln-394 Enterprise Zone to attract redevelopment, enabling tax incentives, façade enhancements, and environmental remediation to draw new tenants and revitalize key corridors. Notable among current initiatives is the South Chicago Heights Station Area Plan, which targets the lands surrounding the planned SES transit station off Sauk Road for mixed-use redevelopment, streetscape upgrades, and enhanced access. The Village has also recently initiated the creation of TIF #5 to expand its toolkit for property improvements and commercial revitalization. On the industrial front, South Chicago Heights benefits from remediation programs targeting brownfield sites in partnership with the South Suburban Mayors & Managers Association, fostering productive reuse of underutilized land. Meanwhile, nearby Chicago Heights (which shares infrastructure and economic ties) has attracted major employers such as Ford Motor Company’s stamping plant and Gerresheimer, a specialty glass manufacturer, citing the region’s pro-business environment, transportation connectivity, and supportive city engagement. Together, these efforts reflect a coordinated strategy to position South Chicago Heights as a regional hub for commerce, logistics, and mixed-use development—with improved transit infrastructure, tax incentives, and remediation capacity serving as the foundation for sustained growth and investment.
