Carolina Lithium

Elevra's proposed Carolina Lithium Project is being designed as one of the world's most sustainable lithium hydroxide operations. Located in Gaston County, North Carolina, the fully integrated project is expected to include mining, spodumene concentration production, and lithium hydroxide conversion at one site.

Carolina Lithium is being developed as a greenfield operation using modern technologies, systems, and procedures. The project is designed to responsibly develop a domestic source of lithium, a critical mineral used in batteries and other technologies that support an increasingly electrified world.

The Carolina Lithium Project is located in Gaston County, North Carolina, within the historic Carolina Tin-Spodumene Belt. The map shows the proposed project's permitted boundary and surrounding roads and communities.

Properties currently being offered for sale by Elevra are located outside the project's permitted footprint. Property-specific information, including location and existing agreements, is provided with each listing.

FREQUENTLY ASKED QUESTIONS

Q: What is the current project status?

A: Carolina Lithium is currently in the permitting and development phase. The project has not yet entered production. Elevra continues to work through regulatory and permitting processes required for the proposed project.

Q: Why are these properties being sold?

A: Elevra is reviewing its land holdings associated with Carolina Lithium as part of the company's ongoing evaluation of the project. As the project has evolved, certain properties may no longer be required for current project needs and therefore will be for sale. Individual property transactions should not, by themselves, be interpreted as a change in the overall status of Carolina Lithium.

Q: What should buyers know?

A: Properties being offered for sale may be located near the proposed Carolina Lithium project. Prospective buyers should review the property-specific information included with each listing. Questions regarding the Carolina Lithium project or Elevra-owned properties can be directed to Elevra Community Relations.

Q: Is this property part of the Carolina Lithium project?

A: No. The property is located outside the Carolina Lithium project's permitted boundary and is not included in the company's current permitted mining plans.

Project information is subject to change as the permitting and development process progresses. Prospective buyers should conduct their own due diligence regarding the property and surrounding area.
