Las Vegas Industrial Market Overview

The market is showing signs of renewed strength, with several long-anticipated deals finally coming to fruition. Big-box developments that had been sitting idle are now being leased, and a number of significant sales closed this past quarter, both strong indicators of forward momentum. Landlords and developers are taking an assertive approach to attract tenants, offering competitive terms and incentives that continue to drive leasing activity across the valley.

Over the past few years, the price gap between submarkets has continued to widen. The Southwest submarket has further solidified its position as one of the valley's premier industrial corridors, thanks to its high image, proximity to amenities, and exceptional connectivity via the 215 Beltway. This premium positioning is reflected in both land and building values, with the Southwest consistently commanding the highest industrial rents and sale prices in the valley. Phelan Commerce Center, a newly constructed ±82K SF building, recently sold for $315 PSF. Meanwhile, several big-box buildings in Henderson that had been sitting vacant are now closing the pricing gap to compete more directly with North Las Vegas. OMP Conestoga, a newly built ±85K SF building, sold for $215 PSF, and a newly constructed ±104K SF freestanding building at Cheyenne Industrial Park in North Las Vegas traded at $225 PSF.

As artificial intelligence becomes increasingly integrated into our everyday lives, the demand for infrastructure to support these needs is accelerating. Switch is progressing on its expansion in the Southwest, while Novva's recent purchase of nearly 205 acres in Apex has put the submarket back in the spotlight as a viable location for large-scale, power-intensive users.

The final quarter of 2025 will serve as the last push to maintain momentum, though seasonal holidays and ongoing tariff considerations may influence activity. How the market closes out the year will offer valuable insight as we reflect on 2025 and prepare for what lies ahead in 2026.
