Local Market Overview

Situated in the center of Silicon Valley, the city benefits from its role as a global center for technology, research, and venture capital investment. Median household income stands at approximately $141,565, with the broader San Jose–Sunnyvale–Santa Clara MSA reporting $157,444, highlighting the strength of the regional job market and concentration of high-wage employment. The metro area population is around 1.97 million, showing stability that supports consistent housing demand. Median property values surpass $1.1 million, placing the market among the most expensive in the nation and underscoring the resilience of local real estate fundamentals.

Commuters average 27–28 minutes in travel time, reflecting both regional connectivity and the challenges of congestion typical of high-growth metros. Traffic volumes along major corridors provide steady support for retail, dining, and service-oriented businesses. While population growth has moderated in recent years, the combination of rising household incomes, stable employment, and sustained housing values continues to fuel long-term demand for both rental and for-sale housing options.
