ZONING

RMFM (Residential Multi-Family District)

RMFM is a general residential zoning district in Cary that allows for a range of moderate- to high-density housing types, including apartments, townhomes, and patio homes. It's designed to support compact residential development—typically up to 12 units per acre—in areas where the town's growth plan calls for more housing options near transit and services. The district emphasizes thoughtful site design, with attention to open space, access, and compatibility with surrounding neighborhoods. Permitted uses include multi-family dwellings, duplexes, and semi-detached homes. Accessory uses such as detached garages, home occupations, and accessory dwelling units (ADUs) are typically allowed. Some group living arrangements and limited non-residential uses, such as daycare homes or neighborhood-scale services, may be permitted with conditions or special use approval.

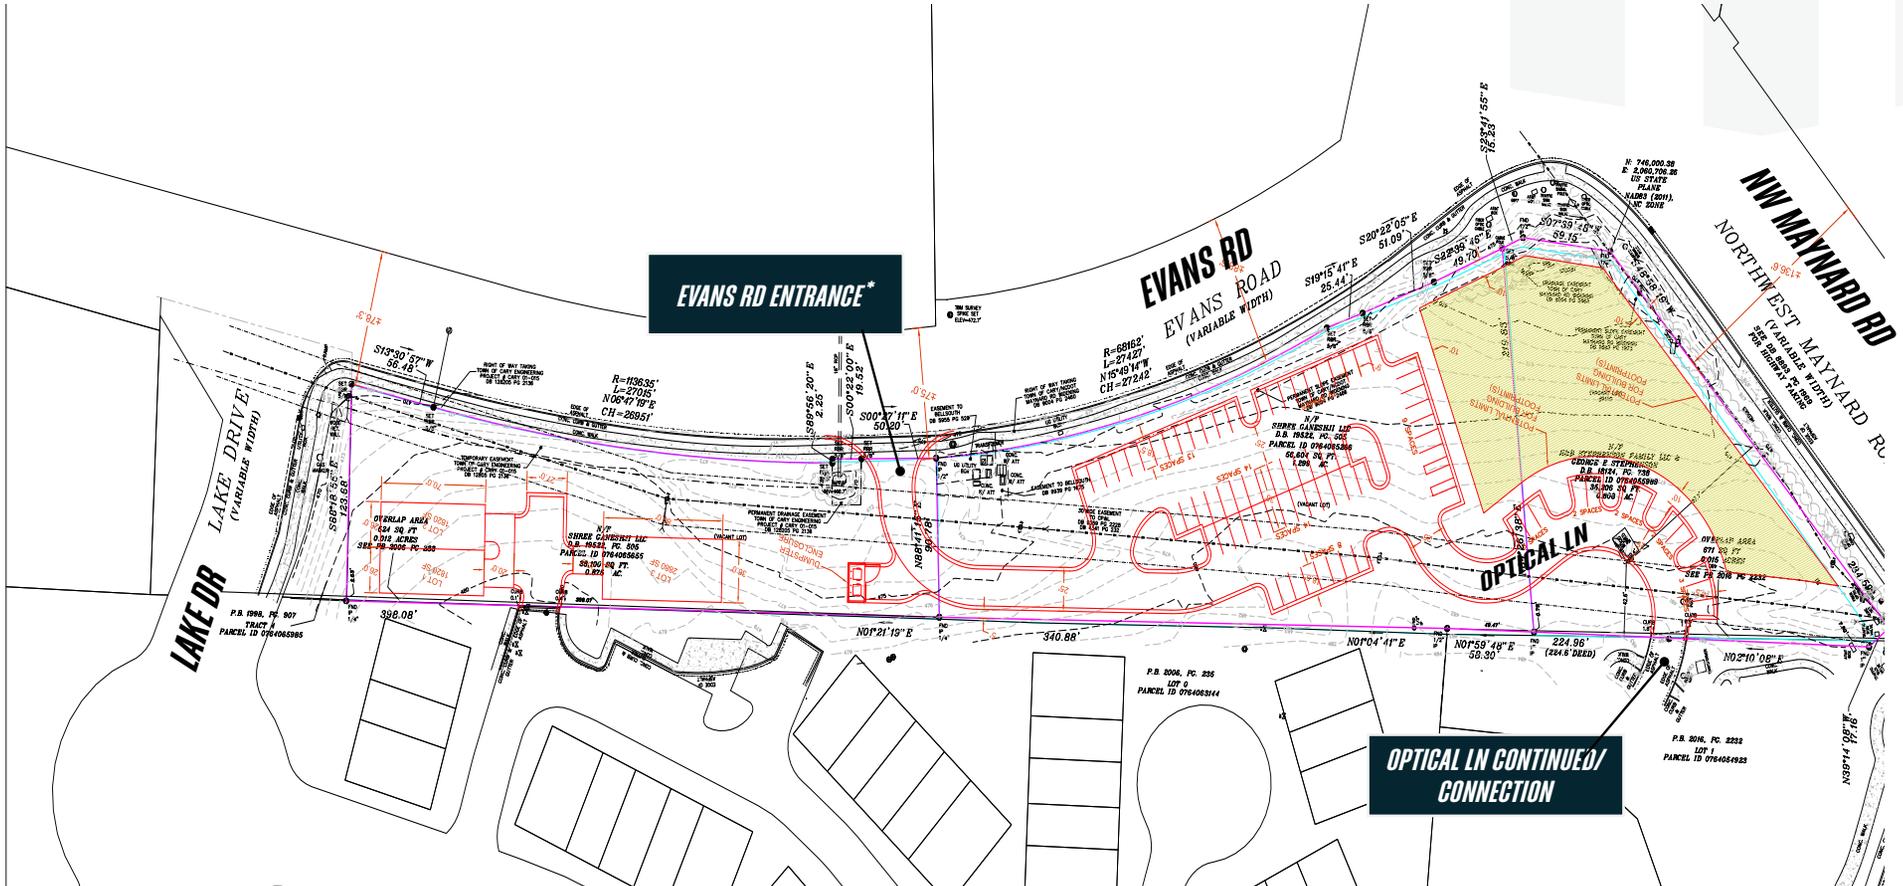

GCM (General Commercial Mixed-Use Overlay)

The GCM overlay district in Cary promotes mixed-use development in designated commercial corridors by enabling a flexible mix of residential, office, and retail uses. Applied over base zones like General Commercial or Office/Research, it encourages walkable, transit-friendly environments where living, working, and shopping can occur within the same development. The overlay allows uses that might otherwise require special approval, provided they are part of an approved mixed-use development plan. Within GCM, permitted uses may include multi-family housing (often above ground-floor retail), townhomes, offices, restaurants, personal services, retail shops, hotels, and institutional uses such as clinics, daycares, and government facilities. Higher-impact uses like car washes, mini-storage, or entertainment venues may be allowed if specifically incorporated into an approved mixed-use master plan.
