Brookfield, WI Overview

Brookfield, Wisconsin is a thriving suburban hub just west of Milwaukee, offering a strategic location along the I-94 corridor that provides convenient access to the broader southeastern Wisconsin region. This advantageous positioning has helped Brookfield develop into a center for office, retail, and light industrial activity, supported by millions of square feet of commercial and industrial space as well as numerous hotels featuring meeting and conference facilities.

The community is known for its strong demographics, including a notably high median annual household income of $121,837—well above county, state, and national averages—and an 81% owner-occupancy housing rate, reflecting a stable, invested population that appeals to businesses, retailers, and service providers seeking reliable consumer and workforce bases.

Brookfield's business environment is strengthened by major local employers including Fiserv, National Insurance Services, ThoughtFocus, and Milwaukee Tool's regional operations, creating a diverse and resilient economic base. The city also features nearly a dozen business and industrial parks spanning more than 1,000 acres, offering well-located sites ideal for corporate offices, logistics, and commercial development.
