WHO WE ARE... AND HOW WE GOT HERE

Built in 1927 by famous architect Roy Benjamin, the Five Points Theater Building is rich with history. Originally home to Riverside Theater, this building housed the first ever theater to show talking pictures in Florida and only the third in the entire nation. The building was originally designed to be easily converted back into a theater in case cinema was “just a trend.” Today, the iconic building proudly serves as a home to the trendiest retailers and office users in the market.

1927-1949

The Riverside Theatre opens and screens the first film with sound in Jacksonville.

1949 - 1972

The theater remodeled and re-opened its doors, but this time with a new name that still stands to this day: “The Five Points Theater.”

1972

The theater underwent major renovations changing from its original Gothic Revival design.

1972-1984

The theater closes its doors after a 50-year run due to the dominance of suburban multi-screen cinemas in the market.

1984 – 1991

A professional live acting theater group, River City Playhouse, moves into the space.

1991 - 2004

Club5 transitions the movie theater offering live music performances ranging from Jive to Rock and Roll.

2004

A local family, the Shads, purchased the theater, closed down Club5 and gave the building a $5M renovation, including restoring and converting the top three floors into office space. This resulted in the building being designated a ‘City of Jacksonville Landmark’.

2011 – 2024

Sun-Ray Cinema opens and continues to operate the most popular theater in the city of Jacksonville.

2024

The Five Points Theater Building sells for the first time since its designation as a historic landmark. The new owners, Union South Partners, will improve the building aesthetic and update the branding in a way that honors the building’s heritage, while re-establishing it as a Jacksonville icon through innovative design of new office, retail and amenity space
