Pinellas Trail History

The Fred Marquis Trail began as a vision in 1983. Bert Valery worked alongside Brian Smith and then County Administrator Fred Marquis to help launch the trail and form the Pinellas County Metropolitan Planning Organization's Bicycle Advisory Committee. In partnership with the Pedestrian Safety Committee, the group set out to create a safe place for bicycling, strolling, and jogging, while the County simultaneously explored new uses for a 34-mile corridor of abandoned CSX railroad right-of-way.

That vision became reality in 1990 when the first 5-mile section of the Pinellas Trail opened, connecting Taylor Park in Largo to Seminole Park in Seminole. The trail quickly exceeded expectations for use. With the passage of the first Penny for Pinellas one-cent local option sales tax, plans moved forward to connect the county from north to south with a continuous trail.

Today, an average of 160,000 people use the trail each month. The trail serves as a unique greenway linking parks, coastal areas, and residential neighborhoods, offering views of live oaks draped in Spanish moss, waterways, and abundant wildlife. Overpasses and underpasses allow users to cross major intersections safely in this highly urbanized environment.

The trail is regularly patrolled by the Pinellas County Security Task Force and county park rangers, with volunteers providing additional support. Amenities such as bike racks, refreshment stops, and a detailed Guide to the Pinellas Trail are provided by the Friends of the Pinellas Trail. Spanning 65 miles, the Pinellas Trail offers residents and visitors an easy way to enjoy the outdoors close to home, work, and everyday destinations.
