Back of the Yards

Back of the Yards is a historically significant neighborhood located just southwest of Chicago's downtown core. Once the engine of Chicago's industrial rise as home to the Union Stockyards, the area is now undergoing a steady transformation – blending its industrial past with new commercial potential.

Citywide mobility and regional reach

The Back of the Yards offers office users a unique opportunity to establish operations in a well-connected, emerging commercial corridor on Chicago's Southside. Just minutes from downtown, the area provides direct access to I-55, I-90/94 and key CTA bus and train routes – ideal for teams needing quick citywide mobility and regional reach.

Attractive for businesses

The neighborhood is seeing renewed investment, streetscape improvements and commercial redevelopment, making it attractive for businesses seeking affordable, adaptable office space outside of the central business district. Ample parking, proximity to industrial and service businesses and an available workforce further support long-term operational success.

Revitalization efforts

Recent city-supported revitalization efforts including infrastructure improvements and corridor enhancements are attracting new development and commercial interest. The availability of flexible office space, coupled with nearby workforce and growing services, make Back of the Yards an emerging choice for organizations looking to establish or expand their footprint in Chicago.
