South Greeley Hwy Corridor

The South Greeley Highway Corridor has emerged as one of the region’s premier data center corridors. This expansive area of South Cheyenne, stretching from I-80 and the Union Pacific Railroad southward, has attracted major technology investments that are reshaping the local economy and infrastructure landscape.

South Greeley Highway (US Hwy 85) continues to serve as the primary commercial corridor for South Cheyenne and a vital regional connection to Colorado. Major technology investments include Meta’s large-scale campus in the adjacent High Plains Business Park, currently under construction with completion targeted for 2027, as well as Microsoft’s planned expansion southeast of the city through new data center campuses near Bison Business Park. Further south, the approved Crusoe Energy campus and Tallgrass power generation facilities continue to reinforce the corridor’s role as a hub for large-scale technology infrastructure.

These developments are driving significant public and private investment in roads, utilities, and water infrastructure while enhancing the area’s appeal for industrial, commercial, and service businesses. With direct access to both I-25 and I-80, proximity to Union Pacific rail, established business parks, and continued transportation improvements, the South Greeley Highway Corridor offers exceptional opportunities within one of Wyoming’s fastest-growing technology and industrial markets.
