ZONNING SUMMARY

R7-A

R7A is a medium-density residential zoning district in New York City designed to promote contextual apartment buildings that align with the existing neighborhood character. Unlike traditional R7 districts governed by height factor regulations, R7A districts are regulated under the mandatory Quality Housing Program, which encourages consistent street walls, predictable building heights, and mid-rise residential development.

R7A districts permit residential buildings with a maximum Floor Area Ratio (FAR) of 4.0. Buildings are typically developed as six- to eight-story elevator apartment houses with high lot coverage and defined street-wall requirements. The zoning includes contextual height and setback regulations, requiring a base height generally between 40 and 65 feet before setbacks are introduced, with a maximum building height of 80 feet.

To preserve neighborhood scale and streetscape continuity, new buildings must align closely with surrounding structures, and landscaped front yards may be required depending on adjacent conditions. Off-street parking is generally required for 50% of dwelling units, though reductions and waivers may apply for smaller developments or properties located within transit zones.

R7A districts are commonly mapped in established residential neighborhoods throughout New York City, including portions of Manhattan, Brooklyn, Queens, and the Bronx, where the zoning supports medium-density housing while reinforcing a traditional urban form and pedestrian-oriented streetscape.
