A New York City Landmark:

The Germania Fire Insurance Company Bowery Building

Adapted from the Landmarks Preservation Commission's landmark designation of March 23, 2010, Designation List 427 LP-2354:

Designed by prominent German architect Carl Pfeiffer and built in 1870, the Germania Fire Insurance Company Bowery Building recalls the time when the Bowery was a major thoroughfare of America's leading German-American neighborhood. The building housed tenants from the time of its opening, and by 1880, its residents included Irish, German and Chinese immigrants.

Between 1900 and 1920, industrial tenants displaced its residents and in 1929, the building was purchased by members of two families who manufactured barber-shop and beauty-parlor equipment in the building into the early 1970s. Residents started returning by the mid-1970s.

One of the building's artist-residents, Ingo Swann, purchased the building with an investor in 1979. Swann was an author and psychic who became famous for co-creating 'Remote Viewing.' His work caught the attention of the Central Intelligence Agency and US Army, who involved Swann in a secret initiative called Project Stargate that conducted remote viewing experiments. Ingo Swann's life and psychic activities was the basis of the 2009 movie The Men Who Stare at Goats, starring George Clooney and Jeff Bridges.
