9 | LOCATION OVERVIEW - Industry, PA

Industry, Pennsylvania, is a small borough in western Beaver County with a population of approximately 1,800 as of the 2020 census. The community spans just under 11 square miles, with about 7.7 percent comprised of water. It lies along the Ohio River and is traversed by Pennsylvania Route 68, connecting residents to nearby towns like Midland and Beaver. The area features the Western Beaver County School District campus, including the local junior/senior high school, which serves as one of its key community anchors.

While specific economic drivers exclusive to the borough are not widely documented, Industry's economy largely reflects the broader patterns of Beaver County. Major employment sectors across the region include education, restaurants and food service, and large retail operations such as warehouse clubs and general merchandise outlets. Historically, industries like iron, steel, rail support, and synthetic fibers played a role in the local economy, though many of these have declined. Today, education, retail, and public sector work form the primary economic base for Industry's residents, with much of the workforce relying on opportunities in neighboring towns and county-wide services.
