This detailed architectural floor plan illustrates the 12th floor of the New York City Police Department's 100-100th Street Precinct. The plan is characterized by a large, open-plan office area occupying the upper and central portions, filled with rows of desks and workstations. To the right, there are several smaller, enclosed offices and a reception area. The lower portion of the plan features a central elevator core, restrooms, and a series of conference rooms. The layout is meticulously organized, showing the spatial arrangement of various functional zones within the floor.
