About Fresno

Located in the heart of California’s San Joaquin Valley, Fresno is the fifth-largest city in the state and the economic, cultural, and agricultural hub of Central California. With a population of over 540,000, Fresno offers the amenities of a large metropolitan area while retaining the accessibility and affordability of a mid-sized city.

Fresno is a key player in the nation’s agricultural production, surrounded by some of the most fertile farmland in the world. The region leads in the production of grapes, almonds, citrus, and a variety of other crops. In addition to agriculture, Fresno’s economy is bolstered by healthcare, education, logistics, and public sector employment.

The city is strategically located along Highway 99, with easy access to I-5 and State Routes 41, 168, and 180—positioning it as a transportation and distribution center. It’s also within driving distance to major destinations such as Yosemite National Park, Sequoia and Kings Canyon, and the Central Coast.

Fresno boasts a growing downtown, expanding university presence (home to California State University, Fresno), and a diverse community with a rich cultural heritage. With a lower cost of living compared to other major California cities and an increasing focus on development and infrastructure, Fresno continues to attract new residents, businesses, and investors.
