ABOUT PRINEVILLE

Prineville represents a dynamic blend of small-town heritage and forward-thinking economic development, making it a compelling location for investment. As the oldest city in Central Oregon, Prineville has long been rooted in agriculture, forestry, and manufacturing, but recent decades have seen a remarkable transformation. With strong leadership and a pro-business climate fostered by local and regional partners like Economic Development for Central Oregon (EDCO), Prineville has become a strategic hub for innovation and industry in the Pacific Northwest.

A key highlight of Prineville's economic trajectory is its emergence as a center for data infrastructure. Global tech giants Meta (Facebook) and Apple have chosen Prineville for large-scale data center operations, drawn by a combination of affordable land, low energy costs, renewable power availability, and efficient permitting processes. These developments have not only driven job creation and tax revenue but have also catalyzed supporting industries ranging from construction to high-tech services, creating a stable and growing ecosystem for business.

Prineville also offers a cost-effective alternative to larger metropolitan areas while retaining access to major transportation corridors, including U.S. Route 26 and proximity to Redmond Municipal Airport. The city is served by a municipally owned railway and an enterprise zone, which offers significant tax incentives for qualifying businesses. Additionally, the community actively supports workforce development through partnerships with local schools, Central Oregon Community College, and regional training initiatives, ensuring a pipeline of skilled labor for diverse industries.
